DPI-associated NGO Spotlight

University of Connecticut

The University of Connecticut, based in Storrs, Connecticut is one of nation's preeminent public research universities.

The university currently educates over 32,000 students across multiple locations throughout the state of Connecticut.

The university exemplifies the principles of global education by attracting a diverse student population from a number of countries, working directly with scholars from around the world and by participating in Universitas 21, a United Nations Academic Impact Partner focused on addressing issues of global significance. Furthermore, the university has actively participated in events such the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate and other conferences focused promoting human rights.

The NGO has been associated with DPI since 2016.
